

See the Picture Gallery in a new light

An exciting lighting and conservation project has just been completed in the Royal Holloway Picture Gallery.

The gallery was closed for two months and all of the paintings were temporarily removed while blinds and UV film were fitted to the windows in what is the first new lighting system installation since The Founder's Building was opened in 1886.

The changes have brought the natural light down to museum conservation levels as well as providing a lighting system that works for all the College events that take place in the space, from public opening hours, to conferences, receptions, weddings and teaching.

Why not arrange to visit the newly refurbished gallery and enjoy seeing the paintings in a new light? The Picture Gallery is open to the public from 10am – 3pm on Wednesdays during term time.
